When the impoverished parents of young Lucille are thrown a financial lifeline by the wealthy and debonair Lester Raleigh, they are more than happy to consent to any terms the rakish gentlemen wishes to impose; even if those terms require that their daughter remains in his custody as security for the loan. And given their liberal use of the whip and birch on the poor girl, they willingly agree that the gentleman administers any punishment he sees fit while she is in his care.

What follows is Lucille's exposure to Mr Raleigh's den of debauchery, the rooms of his mansion estate given over to the most libidinous acts of sadomasochistic and sexual pursuits his wants desire. His newest acquisition is soon put to task with her posterior being smartly tested by the strap, before giving her virginal self over to him in a wave of shameful lust. In front of servant girls Rosa and Selina, often suffering the cane and whip for every minor indiscretion, Lucille will be indoctrinated in all the deeds and devices of a true libertine.

As with the likes of 'First Training' and 'The Yellow Room', this rare gem, written psuedonymously in 1938, mixes the graphic prose of its Victorian erotic forebearers with the raw energy of flagellatory fiction. This tale will leave any fan of the genre suitable shocked and more than a little titillated.
